

Chances are he'll never cure cancer,
walk on the moon or be Prime Minister.

Then again, neither will you.

This is James.

And he's a student in a regular public school
with a whole bunch of other regular kids.

James also has an intellectual disability.

Some people say kids like James are disruptive in class and take up all the teacher's time.
That they should be in their own schools.

None of those people are in James' class.

These are just bad excuses because they're simply not true.

Kids like James learn and grow as people much better with other regular kids in a regular schoolroom. Instead of being special, James just needs to be.

James may not cure cancer.
But he'll help other kids in his class
see life a whole lot differently.

Go to www.no-excuses.ca

50 years

Canadian Association for Community Living

Diversity includes.